

Farmers Market

Local Farmer's Markets are great outlets for exposing community members to problems of global and local hunger, and for presenting them with opportunities to be a part of the solution. Participating in a farmer's market could simply include setting up an informational table for education and engagement, or it may include actually selling items (ie: crafts, fruits, vegetables, baked goods, coffee, etc) from which the proceeds would go to a hunger or poverty relief organization of your choosing.

