Educating Alabama’s Urban Audiences
The Alabama Cooperative Extension System (Extension) operates as the primary organization that fulfills the land-grant functions of Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical University (AAMU) and Auburn University. Urban Affairs and New Nontraditional Programs (Urban Affairs) is an Extension unit housed at AAMU that targets individuals, families, and communities in Alabama’s Metropolitan Statistical Areas (MSAs). These MSAs include Anniston/Gadsden, Birmingham, Decatur, Dothan, Florence, Huntsville, Montgomery, Mobile, and Tuscaloosa.

How does Extension work?
Subject matter specialists design and urban Extension agents and program assistants implement research-based projects that help to improve the lives of people, businesses, and communities across the state of Alabama. Alabama Extension’s projects have received national recognition and serve as models for other Extension programs across the country.

With an office in every county, you can find the number and location of the nearest Extension office in the blue pages of your phone book. Extension is also visible on Web and social media sites, or you can download its mobile feed or Android App at www.aces.edu.
